

TALON GOLF GLOVE

Normally, when a product is labeled as tacky, that's not good. But the owners of CaddyDaddy Golf are thrilled with that distinction, at least when it comes to the Talon glove and the company's Tack Fusion grip technology. Wearing this glove will literally give you sticky fingers, which is kind of the idea when gripping a golf club in varying weather conditions. CaddyDaddy is primarily known for golf travel bags, but, as the story goes, the company was intrigued by the materials used in gloves worn by running backs and receivers in the NFL, and officials wanted to bring that technology to golf. The result is Talon, which can have its tackiness revived with the dab of a damp towel after each round. Visit caddydaddygolf.com

UNDER ARMOUR COLD BLACK

You might not be able to play like Jordan Spieth but you can wear the Under Armour apparel he likes, including the Coldblack line being touted as a game changer. Many fabrics, especially dark colors, heat up in the sun, but Under Armour's new technology is allowing players who prefer wearing dark hues to do so all year long, with the added benefit of skin protection from sun damage. A variety of colors make the options a good fit for off the course as well. Visit underarmour.com

BRIDGESTONE ARMY E6 BALLS

If you play Army golf – you know: left, right, left, right – then Bridgestone has the perfect ball for you. The company and the U.S. Army have partnered on a limited edition e6 golf ball bearing the Army logo and a Digi Camo pattern. Plus, the e6 is designed to fly straighter, so hopefully you can eliminate that back-and-forth play. The e6 also has a soft multilayer and web dimple design that enhances surface coverage for more distance. Visit bridgestonegolf.com
