2015 Father's Day Gift Guide (Part 1)

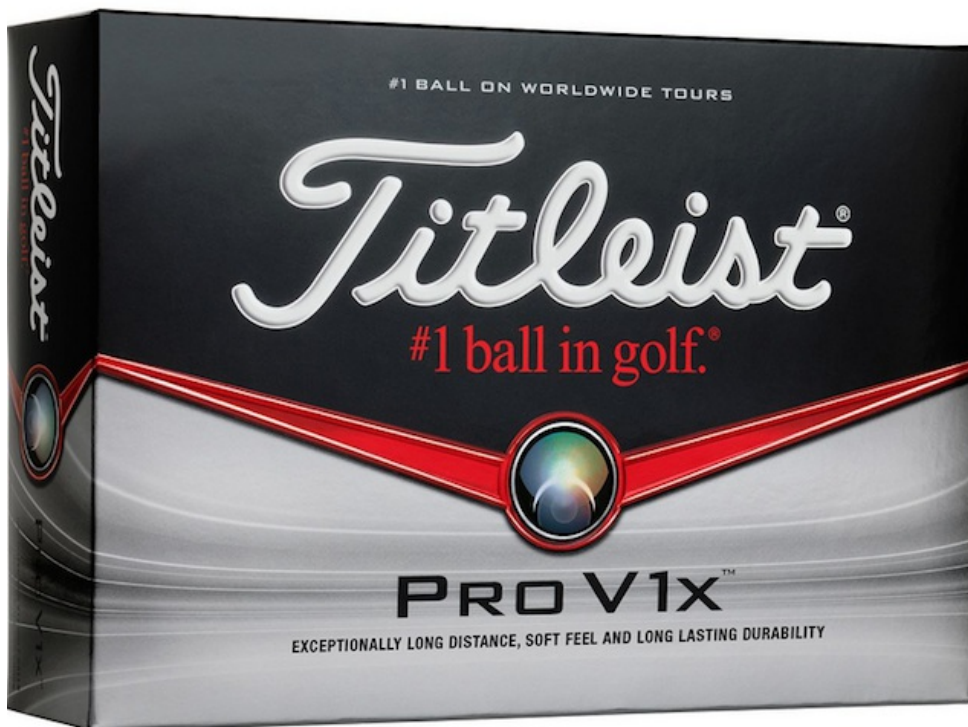

By Kyle Porter | Golf Writer

June 14, 2015 11:22 pm ET

Not sure what to get the dad in your life this Father's Day? Well, tickets to watch Tiger Woods at any point in, say, the next six months are not a good idea.

I do have a couple of things that will play for you. A couple of things that I've tested out, enjoyed and your father, husband, son or brother might enjoy. Let's take a look at Part 1 of my 2015 Father's Day Gift Guide.

Titleist Pro V1Xs

Price: $40

Buy: Here

Why: A fun gift that won't break the bank. Pro V1s and Pro V1xs always sound a lot more expensive than they actually are. Not that they're cheap, but the amount of value the father in your life will glean from a box of Pro V1xs goes far beyond $40.

I'm a pretty average golfer so I don't always play with them on the course, but because of their response on greens and feel off the club, I've found myself using them exclusively recently to chip with.

Caddy Daddy Talon Golf Glove

Price: $18

Buy: Here

Why: I have to admit, at first I was skeptical of these Caddy Daddy golf gloves. Wait, a golf glove that has a sticky exterior like a wide receiver's glove in football? That won't work, will it? It does. If I'm reaching for a glove in my bag, I've been going to this one more often than not of late.

The technical term is Tack Fusion grip technology, and it rarely wears thin and doesn't turn smooth for thousands of swings. Two (sticky) thumbs up.

Bolle Bolt Sunglasses

Price: $55

Buy: Here

Why: I've enjoyed the Bolle Bolt sunglasses for a number of reasons. They don't wiggle around when I'm swinging (always a problem), actually look cool (for a 30-year-old father of two, anyway) and hey, they're pretty cheap at $55.

I didn't know a lot about Bolle until recently but I would recommend any of their products. They're well-made and reasonably priced. If your guy needs something better than the shades he bought at the quickie mart down the street, these are for you.
